

NARPI Background

NARPI is a peacebuilding institute in which participants from Northeast Asia receive training and build relationships with people from different parts of Asia, seeking transformative and positive approaches to conflict and cultural differences.

The 2024 NARPI Summer Peacebuilding Training will be hosted in Minamata and Miyazaki from August 12-21. Participants can choose one out of five courses, facilitated by both Northeast Asian and international experts and practitioners on these topics. NARPI aims to equip both new and experienced peacebuilders with skills through workshop-style courses, bringing together participants from different parts of Northeast Asia for the purpose of training, relationship-building, and cultural understanding.

Previous training have been held in 2011 in Seoul and Inje, 2012 in Hiroshima, 2013 in Inje, 2014 in Nanjing, 2015 in Ulaanbaatar, 2016 in Jinshan and Taipei, 2017 in Okinawa, 2018 on Jeju Island, 2019 in Nanjing, and 2023 in Terelj.

From 2020-2022, plans for NARPI in-person gatherings were canceled due to the COVID-19 pandemic. During this season, a new generation of NARPI leaders created and facilitated eight Online NARPI! (ON!) workshops in 2021-2022. In August 2022, the Steering Committee and admin team planned NARPI 2022: Special Online & Local Alternative to the Summer Peacebuilding Training. This alternative program included two days of online discussions and a one-day NARPI-style field trip in local communities.

Peace Games is organized by long-partners of NARPI: AFSC (American Friends Service Committee) and GPPAC (Global Partnership for the Prevention of Armed Conflict). The Northeast Asia Peace Games is a half-day, multi-party peace process simulation designed with university students and civil society practitioners in mind. This interactive workshop is focused on giving participants an experiential learning opportunity related to negotiation and peace in the context of Northeast Asia.

Field Trip: August 13-14

NARPI provides a two-day field trip where participants visit various sites and meet people who have experienced historical, political, social, and cultural conflict, injustice, and peace. The field trip takes place in the region where NARPI is held -- this year in Minamata. The field trip in Minamata will address the history of environmental pollution and efforts for restoration.

The city of Minamata has a history of environmental pollution in which people lost their lives due to mercury contamination from factory wastewater in the mid-20th century. The perpetrator company, Chisso, had built hydroelectric power plant dams and factories in the Korean Peninsula (North Korea) in colonial time (1932) Japan. The factory is still used in the DPRK. The structural violence of environmental pollution divided and traumatized the community in the name of developing the business and state. In response, nonviolent social movements and a culture of restorative justice were nurtured to revitalize the region. The field trip will highlight environmental justice as a common challenge for the contemporary Northeast Asia region by witnessing, hearing, and learning from local community members. It will provide the opportunity to ponder the continuities between the past colonialism in WW2 and the present social issues.

Course List: August 16-20

Course #1: Conflict and Peace Framework

Facilitators: KIM Gayeon and KAJITA Natsuha

This course will provide a framework of peace and conflict studies to those who need introductory provision to the field. It will focus on three major terms of the field: conflict, peace, and violence. The participants will work on defining and understanding these terms and applying them to our local and regional contexts with specific issues and cases. Throughout the course, sessions are composed of various ways of active learning, such as group work, role plays, and communication skills exercises. Participants are expected to contribute to the course as resources to each other by sharing their knowledge, experience, and reflection on in-class activities.

Course #2: Optimizing Peacebuilding by Increasing Trauma Awareness

Facilitators: LU deting and KATO Youki

This 5-day workshop offers a space to deepen our understanding of trauma and its fundamental role in optimizing peacebuilding. Through interactive sessions, participants will learn how social, collective, and historical trauma live through generations to undermine peacebuilding and how we can work with it using somatic psychology and creative arts. This year, our dialogue will also include the Minamata story as an example to address how trauma can serve as a root cause resulting in divisions at different levels. Centered on participatory and experiential learning, this workshop may be beneficial for anyone interested in increasing their trauma awareness, thereby optimizing efforts in building lasting peace.

(Note: This course may collaborate with the Exploring Gender and Sexuality in Conflict and Peacebuilding: An Arts-based Approach course for certain sessions.)

Course #3: Exploring Gender and Sexuality in Conflict and Peacebuilding: An Arts-based Approach

Facilitators: KANG Yunghun (Jeram) and OKUMOTO Kyoko

This course will consider the role of identity, especially gender, and sexuality, in conflict and peacebuilding. Participants and facilitators will start by unpacking our diverse selves. We will have a journey together to explore our and each other's positionality. There are different structures of violence and conflict in our world today that threaten us. We see this in our treatment of minorities, our biases, stereotyping, and discrimination in different realms of society. By using arts approaches we will create a safe and peaceful space and through this try to experience different stories and contexts of our group. Participants will leave as artist-activists who can take their own learnings to their communities and societies in Northeast Asia.

Course #4: Restorative Justice: Healing our Society and the Planet

Facilitators: LEE Jae Young and ISHIHARA Akiko

Restorative Justice (RJ) is a new justice paradigm that aims for right relationships and healing as the ultimate goal of justice. When something wrong happens, RJ focuses not only on punishing wrongdoers, but on how to meet the needs of victims, communities, and the environment that are affected by the wrongdoing. And it also invites wrongdoers into opportunities to take voluntary responsibilities through various dialogue programs in order to bring just-peace. In this course, participants will learn the basic principles of RJ and how it can be practiced in different aspects of society, such as criminal justice, school violence, and neighbor disputes. This year we will also highlight the issue of environmental justice and explore how to build just relationships with the earth and other creatures, related to environmental issues on our planet. We will explore the possibilities of bringing justice and healing in communities and ecosystems affected by environmental harm, through the lens of restorative justice.

Course #5: Creating Peacebuilding Programs

Facilitators: Cheryl WOELK and KIM Hong Soek; Assistant Facilitator: LEE Paul Kyumin

This course is an advanced course designed to support peacebuilding practitioners with at least two years of practical experience or study who want to create or expand their peacebuilding programs. Participants will bring their own experiences and ideas to the course and build a plan for the program that they want to develop. Through applying systems thinking models, conflict transformation change processes, peace education frameworks, participatory facilitation strategies, adaptive management and other tools to create a learning space where participants experience the kind of program that they want to implement, participants will equip themselves with frameworks, strategies and mindsets necessary to design and implement effective peacebuilding programs in diverse contexts.

Creating Peacebuilding Programs is an advanced course for:

- NARPI repeaters who want to create or expand their peacebuilding program
- Peacebuilding practitioners (with at least two years of work/study experience) who want to create or expand their peacebuilding program
